

Paul Purcell

Paul Purcell is the CEO of InfoQuest Investigators, Inc., a private-sector investigation and consulting firm in Atlanta, where he is the primary security analyst and terrorism preparedness consultant.

Starting with an extensive risk management background in the hospitality industry, Paul began his early investigative career with a strong focus on internal and external security and general crisis management for a wide variety of clients. This led to more and more work in corporate settings investigating white-collar crime and providing asset security analysis and personnel protection.

As a post-9/11 contribution, Paul submitted numerous vulnerability studies concerning the FAA, the CDC, the 2001 World Series Games, the 2002 Winter Olympics, and the 2002 Super Bowl. As a result, Paul was invited to join the DeKalb County Office of Homeland Security as a civilian security analyst. His contributions included vulnerability studies of the county's sensitive infrastructure locations and the submission of terror attack scenarios for table-top exercises.

Over the past two decades, Paul has worked as an independent private-sector consultant and trainer for a host of public and private-sector entities. He trains law enforcement and other first responders in enhanced family preparedness, he contributed heavily to the state of Georgia's Pandemic Influenza preparedness plan, he does extensive Business Continuity Planning work, he has done script writing and consultation for Spike TV's "Surviving Disaster" series, he appeared on the Dr. Oz show to discuss disaster preparedness, and, most recently, he served as Operations Chief for the state's Medical Reserve Corps (MAG-MRC) when they were deployed along with the National Guard and State Defense Force to respond to COVID.

Today, his sole goal is to leave you with as much information as he can possibly squeeze into one hour, in order to help you help others.
